

Contents

Preface and Acknowledgments	11
1. Introduction	13
1.0. Goals of the present study	13
1.1. Temporal and aspectual categories in Ancient Greek	14
1.2. Aspect and actionality in previous studies	16
1.3. The Homeric corpus	17
1.4. Actional classification: the method used in the study	19
1.5. On prefixed verbs	21
1.6. Structure of the book	23
2. Theoretical Background	24
2.0. Introduction	24
2.1. Defining aspect	25
2.1.1. The imperfective aspect	27
2.1.2. The perfective aspect	28
2.1.3. Iterativity	31
2.2. Defining actionality	32
2.2.1. Classification of events	33
2.2.2. Activities versus accomplishments	35
2.2.3. In defence of achievements	38
2.2.4. The interaction of aspect and actionality	41
2.3. Tense, aspect and actionality from an Indo-European Perspective	45
2.3.1. The Proto-Indo-European verb: an aspectual and tenseless system?	45

2.3.2. Reconstructing aspect and Aktionsart	47
2.3.3. The perfect stem	51
2.3.4. The “temporal theory” versus the “aspectual theory”	53
2.4. The Greek present/aorist dichotomy	56
2.4.1. The aspectual interpretation	57
2.4.2. The temporal interpretation	61
2.4.3. Towards a new approach to aspect	64
2.5. Applying syntactic tests to Homeric Greek	70
2.5.1. Durative adverbial types and actional classes	71
2.5.2. Various actional tests	74
2.5.3. Durative adverbial types and aspectuality	77
2.5.4. Some conclusions on the distribution of imperfective and perfective aspect	82
3. Activities and Accomplishments in Homeric Greek	85
3.0. Introduction	85
3.1. The role of the direct object with transitive verbs	86
3.1.1. Verbs of destruction	87
3.1.2. Verbs of various semantic fields	102
3.1.3. More on definiteness and telicity	111
3.2. Transitive verbs of motion	117
3.3. Intransitive activities and accomplishments	123
3.4. Conclusions	127
4. Achievements and States in Homeric Greek	129
4.0. Introduction	129
4.1. Achievements: punctuality and semelfactivity	129
4.2. On achievements across languages: Botne (2003)	138
4.2.1. The Homeric verb θνῆσκω	143
4.2.2. Comparing θνῆσκω to πίπτω	147
4.3. States: between “state” and “entry into a state”	149
4.3.1. Some specific data	150
4.3.2. A case study: physical perception verbs and cognitive verbs	157

5. Considering Some Special Cases	163
5.0. Introduction	163
5.1. Verbs of motion	164
5.2. Verbs of communication	173
5.3. Verbs with intransitive/transitive aorist pairs	181
5.3.1. The inchoative/causative alternation	185
 6. A Typological Overview	189
6.0. Introduction	189
6.1. Homeric aspectual system	189
6.2. Tense-aspect systems across languages	191
6.3. The expression of telicity	199
6.4. Co-occurrence restrictions of durative temporal adverbials	208
6.5. Diachronic typology and the reconstruction of aspect in Proto-Indo-European	209
6.6. Final remarks	214
 Appendix I	216
 Appendix II	223
 Appendix III	227
 Index Locorum	229
 Abbreviations	234
 References	235